

Charity design concept Holiday House comes to London

The Teenage Dream bedroom, designed by Studio Suss, aims to tell teenagers to be in control of their destiny, and aware of breast cancer risks (Credit: Mel Yates)

Simone Suss, founder and director of contemporary interior company Studio Suss, spoke to BBC Designed about the design of the firm's perfectly pink Teenage Dream bedroom. "We want teenagers to know that they are in control of their destiny and that they should be aware of breast cancer. Their bedroom is their sanctuary, the one place they can be totally themselves: a place to dream and be alone."

We want teenagers to know that they are in control of their destiny. Their bedroom is their sanctuary, the one place they can be totally themselves - Simone Suss